The big feather in KTM's cap was the 790 Adventure R, which Mattighofen even ran in a full-blown rally race. But through all this excitement, an old capacity soldiered on despite a collapse in motorcycle sales and that was the KTM 690 Enduro R. In fact, the Enduro R increased Aussie volume from 2018 to 2019 by 31.7% to 212 units.

To off-road riders, the 690 is an adventure bike. Its big Single is smoothed out by dual counterbalancers, and a nice electronics package sets it apart from the 350 or 500 EXCs and two strokes available in KTM's enduro/dual-sport range. Ask the same question to a street rider and you get, "It's a dirtbike".

When KTM relaunched the 690 Enduro R in 2019 we were impressed. It's a good, old-fashioned dual-sport trail bike but bang up-to-date in terms of looks, controls chassis and suspension plus has a list of genuinely useful electronic aids handed down from its bigger Adventure bike siblings (variable cornering ABS and traction control depending on which riding mode you select).
