Violence in ... In Sri Lanka

Buddhism is enshrined in the Sri Lanka Constitution as the State Religion. Although other religions are allowed religious 'freedom', this is in practice marginal at best. According to the Sri Lankan government's own published data, more than 64,000 Hindus, Muslims and Christians have been killed by the government forces controlled by the Buddhists, for seeking religious equality.

been attacked and torched by Buddhist mobs, often aided by the security forces.

Hundreds of Rohingya have been killed and some 140,000 left homeless. The anti-Muslim campaign has been led by monks who justify their actions as in keeping with the demands of Buddhism.
